

Many Conferences Lack Clear Information about Disability Access

The logistics and structural barriers of many research conferences prevent full participation of people with disabilities. We review the websites of 161 conferences and show that there is substantial room for improved communication about barriers. We also suggest ideas for quick and low-budget stopgap accessibility improvements.

Please note you will need a subscription to Nature Human Behavior read this publication in full.

View the PUBlication